Steve Selinsky Named NAHU's 81st President

(Arlington, VA)—Steve Selinsky was sworn in last week as the new president of the National Association of Health Underwriters (NAHU) at its 80th Annual Convention in Chicago, making him a spokesperson for one of the leading trade associations representing health insurance professionals across the United States.

After accepting the position from outgoing president Russ Childers, Selinsky emphasized the need to understand the new health care reform legislation and its impact on American health care consumers.

“I believe—now, more than ever—agents and brokers play a critical role in educating and navigating our clients through this ever-changing industry,” said Selinsky. “They need experienced and educated benefit professionals to help them plan for their future health, financial and retirement security. As NAHU members, we need to embrace change and prepare for the changing landscape of our health care system.”

As an active member of several professional organizations, Selinsky is well known within the health insurance industry. He has served as president of the Metro Detroit Association of Health Underwriters and sits on the local board of the National Association of Insurance and Financial Advisors. He has been active in the health insurance industry since 1990 and is the current director of sales and marketing for BeneSys, Inc.

Selinsky received a bachelor's degree from Albion College. He and his wife, Kerry, live in Farmington Hills, MI, with their two small children. Selinsky is also very active in his community, including involvement with his local literacy council and serving as team manager for his son's soccer team.

The National Association of Health Underwriters represents more than 100,000 professional health insurance agents and brokers who provide insurance for millions of Americans. NAHU is headquartered in Arlington, VA. For more information, visit our web site at www.nahu.org.
